バリ海峡をボートで横断、ジープとトレッキングの旅

Discover one of the many diverse attractions in the archipelago by securing a two-day exploration trip to Bali's nearest volcanic peak, Mount Ijen, Java's easternmost strato-volcano complex.

Located only 40 kilometers from Bali's western harbor port of Gilimanuk, the large 20 kilometer wide Ijen caldera features a panoramic view of the nearly 1 kilometer wide turquoise-colored, acid crater lake, easily the focal point of many tourist cameras.

Arguably the world's largest highly acidic lake, Mount Ijen has many reasons why travelers to Bali should go beyond the island and take a look at this nearby attraction.

Picturesque Ijen is the site of a labor-intensive sulfur mining operation in which sulfur-laden baskets are hand-carried from the Ijen floor up to the nearby collection point. You will observe how sulfur miners distillate the flowing, smoky material using pipes that are put on the edge of sulfur canals to allow it to freeze. (freeze, as in ice?)

The Ijen Crater is located within the Indonesian Strict Nature Reserve & Tourism Park, at an altitude of 2,386 meters above sea level. The caldera wall forms a prominent ridge measuring roughly just over 200 meters above the waters surface.

The Ijen Crater features a Sub-Alpine forest ecosystem. The dominant plants include the Casuarina tree (Casuarina junghuhniana), Jamuju (Podocarpus imbricata), Pasang (Lithocarpus sp.), Fanisium (Vacinium varingaefolia) and the edelweiss flower (Anaphalis javanica), which is an everlasting flower that starts blossoming in August or September.
